In the early 1940s, a Swiss engineer noticed that when he walked his dog, they both came back with burrs attached to their clothes. After years of research and hard work, he copied the burr's grip - and named his invention Velcro. A US patent was issued in 1955, and by 1957 Velcro had come to America.

The year was 1955. Tappan, working with Raytheon, released the RL-1, the first microwave designed for home use. Only 34 units were made that year, partially because of its $1295 price tag and partially because it was confusing to use. Today, around 90% of homes have microwaves in them. That's today's wordoku word.

OH NO!

A very important singer can't find his blue suede shoes. Can you help him through the maze?

PAPER DOLLS have been around as long as there have been pencils, paper and creative people. The years '35 through 1960 are considered their "golden age." Paper dolls were everywhere, including magazines. McCall's magazine featured paper dolls for decades, but the most popular one was Betsy McCall, who debuted in 1951. While the doll below isn't Betsy McCall, feel free to cut out the items, draw more clothes and enjoy!
